A Tour Over the Indiana Knobs. One of the most pleasant afternoons I have ever spent, was in the early fall of last year when, with two companions I made an excursion over the New Albany Knobs.

Arriving at the foot of the first hill and gazing upward, into labyrinthian shades, it seemed that its exploration might be compared, briefly, to the journey of life; and that we three, having glided easily through the first stage, were entering the second, with the gladness and light-heartedness of childhood, intermingled, as we glanced ever and anon toward the terrace above, and sometime beyond, with curious wonder; tance, with admiration and awe: ening and mastering the obscure future.

maple and poplar trees, across the lea, beheld, apparently at the mountain's foot, the sleepy city of New Albany. that, in the distance seemed like an eastern hamlet on Sunday.

Now pursuing our way upward with the bouyancy of youth, came memories, which, as they flocked together, were pleasant, and all the journey past seemed as a bright dream. To one side of the path a party of revelers, having reached the plane of their aspirations, were indulging in a beverage that rections, drowned the humiliation of mediocraey in intoxication.

Refusing an invitation to join in the our time was just sufficient to accomplish the object of our journey, with a firm and elastic step, by a circuitous route, we reached the top of the second elevated plane, almost completely out of breath. Here, in the poetry of youth, almost within reach of the realities of manhood, the intervening space bridged by delight, we rested. Looking to the West, down the Ohio valley, the sublimity of the view, called forth

On the South was field after field of waving grain, interspersed here and there, with pastures, of the richest green, containing grazing herds of Jersey, that in the distance looked like moving specks, and bounded, further on by space, at the vastness of which the human eve trembled, refusing to interpret the contrast, of the cerulean blue and green where they came in contact, over the soil of "The dark and bloody ground." Reluctantly leaving this scene, we redoubled our efforts in the ascension to the Sammit, thinking that when this was attained our progress would not be hindered. But when gained, we found,

"About two years ago, after suffering for nearly two years from rheumatic gout, being able to walk only with great discomfort, and having tried various remedies, including mineral waters, without relief, I saw by an advertisement in a Chicago paper that a man had been relieved of this distressing complaint, after long suffering, by taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I then decided to make a trial of this medicine, and took it regularly for eight mouths, and am pleased to state that it has effected a complete cure.
